Internationalizing Our Campus

In Memory of

We regret having to report to you the death of trustee Andy Vance. Mr. Vance passed away at his home on Friday, July 11. He was 72 years old.

Mr. Vance was an exceptional trustee. His leadership of the Academic Affairs Committee and his work on the Board's Executive Committee brought a dimension to the Board that helped shape the future of the College.

Mr. Vance was a lawyer and lay leader of the Greek Orthodox Church in America. He was a Navy veteran, a graduate of Harvard College (cum laude) and Harvard Law School. From 1953 to 1976, he was an attorney with the United States Department of Justice, serving as a trial attorney in the General Litigation Section of the Civil Division until 1962, when he was appointed Chief of the Customs Section of the Department and became responsible for all Customs litigation in the federal courts. In 1976 he became a partner in the law firm of Barnes, Richardson & Colburn, where he continued to practice Customs and International Trade Law until his death.

Mr. Vance was a member of the Advisory Rules Committee of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit in Washington DC and the U.S. Court of International Trade in New York. He was past President of the Customs and International Trade Bar Association and of the Federal Circuit Bar Association and former Chairman of the Standing Committee on Customs Law of the American Bar Association. He served on the Administrative Law Committee and the Committee on International Trade of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York and was a member of the Federal Bar Council and the District of Columbia Bar.

He was widely known for his ability as a trial and appellate advocate and was universally respected by clients, members of the bar and the judiciary for his expertise and high standards of practice.

Mr. Vance was very active in the Greek Orthodox Church in America. He was a member of the Greek Archdiocese Council of North and South America and of the Advisory Board of the Orthodox Observer. He was a member of the Governing Board of the National Council of Churches of Christ and was twice elected President of The Church of Our Saviour in Rye, NY. He also served as National Chairman of the Greek Orthodox Youth of America and President of the Eastern Orthodox Youth Leaders Council of the Americas.

He was an ARCHON of the Ecumenical Patriarchate of Constantinople and was awarded the Saint Paul's medal by the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of North and South America.

He is survived by his wife of 45 years, Olvia, a son Peter, three daughters Catherine, Penelope and Dorothy, daughter-in-law Lana, son-in-law William Hobbie, and grandson Liam.

—Andy Vance

Editor's Note — Upon the deadline for this publication of the Bulletin, the Juniata community was saddened by the death of Elizabeth Rohrbaugh "Betty Ann" Oller '23, wife of Dr. Jack E. Oller '23 who died May 20, 1986.

The World

Fred Bonekamp parked himself on Founders Hall porch this past Mother's Day just prior to Juniata's 119th commencement ceremonies, thousands of miles from his home in Germany and even further from his vision of America as a bustling, big-city metropolis with a night life straight out of the Wild West. While the hustle and bustle of New York City, the glitz and glamour of L.A., and the high-brow political life of Washington, D.C. ran rampant on his mind before entering America, he left the country content in the knowledge that his Juniata education can take him to an even higher life.

For better or worse, America's international image lies largely on the concept of a big-city, bi-coastal country full of slick, swashbuckling, techno-crazed Yankee entrepreneurs and imperialists with cutting-edge social lives. Asked to give their initial conception of America prior to visiting, six of Juniata's Spring '97 international students mentioned images common to any high-powered Hollywood movie and sites such as the Statue of Liberty, the Empire State Building, and the Washington Monument. It is a common view of America in the international community, and one that takes time and, perhaps, a visit to a small, private, liberal arts college in the rural hills of Pennsylvania to refine.

Such is the state of Juniata's international commitment. Since the college instituted a campaign in 1993 to internationalize its campus, one of the overriding issues for the International Programs Office (IPO) has been to persuade students from abroad to look beyond dreams of the American fast life to see that living the American Dream rests at the heart of Juniata – through a comfortable international atmosphere on campus as well as within the curriculum.

Within Juniata

By the same token, American students have gotten a glimpse of the world since Juniata implemented its four-year old strategic plan for internationalizing the college. Mr. Bonekamp, a business administration graduate, mused that, "When I arrived, I saw that many American students couldn't see over the mountains that surround them here at Juniata." Now, he takes satisfaction in knowing that he and his fellow internationals have helped those American students see the world right next to them.

During the past decade, students have come to Juniata from more than 40 countries. In 1989, Juniata President Robert W. Neff affirmed the college's strong commitment "to provide an education within a global context by enhancing the international dimensions of the college." It is important to note that Juniata's international program is not a new venture, as evidenced in the 1993 strategic plan, which states, "Juniata College has a longstanding belief that students should be sensitive participants in the larger world of which they are a part." However, strengthening the college's historical commitment to international education became a priority in response to an ever-increasing global society.

"All our students live in a world today that is international," said David Sowell, who celebrated his one-year anniversary as Juniata's IPO director in July. "Therefore, we aspire to make international a dimension of their experience on campus."

The Working Task Group on International Education, a committee comprised of faculty, students, and college administrators, crafted the strategic plan for internationalizing the college. The task group formed following consultations in 1992, after which Juniata took steps to more efficiently integrate its Student Services Office with its international programs. The logic was that an increased emphasis on recruiting internationally required establishing a more diverse atmosphere on campus to make life more comfortable, compatible, and aesthetic for international students. Indeed, among the goals and objectives for IPO were several emphasizing the provision of student services, including expanding its services to a broader segment of the college community, promoting the development of stronger international components within departmental offerings, and facilitating the internationalization of the curriculum and co-curricular activities of the college. Two other goals were to encourage more of Juniata's domestic students to study foreign languages as well as to study abroad.

"Internationalizing the campus is a two-way street," Dr. Sowell said. "We want to add a mix of voices to our campus by providing opportunities for as many international students as possible, and we want our domestic students to take full advantage of their opportunities by learning foreign languages and gaining the experience of studying abroad."

The formation of an International Education Committee has helped the college monitor its progress toward its stated goals, and the early results can be generally called positive. Moving the International Programs Office to the College Center in Ellis Hall has helped alleviate the problem of cramped quarters while placing the office in a highly visible area, where students can gather in their leisure time. This has helped the office expand its ability to serve a larger segment of the student body, and plans are underway to attract more students to interact with the office. Another vital aspect of student services has been the English as a Second Language (ESL) program, which provides for international students (for whom English is a second language) full English language support to ensure that they will acquire the necessary communication skills for academic success.

"I heard Juniata has a good

As part of its international program, Juniata College supports a variety of study abroad opportunities for students, including a full academic year, one semester, and short-term summer programs. Currently, there are 23 colleges and universities worldwide with which Juniata has a study abroad alliance. Locations include: China, Ecuador, France, Germany, Greece, India, Japan, Mexico, Russia, Spain, and the United Kingdom.

Juniata students may also study abroad under other programs sponsored by colleges and universities with which Juniata does not have special arrangements. Such programs must be accredited U.S. colleges or universities or involve direct enrollment in an approved university outside the U.S.

Kelly Morton '98 provides the following perspective into Juniata's study abroad program.

A shared complaint frequently stated by Juniata students concerns the location of the college. For many, the small, isolated town of Huntingdon fails to meet the stereotypical view of a "fun-time" college environment. But every year for 50 or 60 students like myself, our Juniata education extends thousands of miles away below the equator or half-way across the world.

Very different places in Mexico, India, France, Germany, Russia, Japan—just to name a few—become temporary "homes" for Juniatians who take the opportunity to spend a semester or a year abroad. I, myself, claimed the historic and popular city of York, England, to further my communication and international studies. Far from familiar individuals and recognizable places, I became immersed in a culture very different from that of small-town Huntingdon.

The thought of studying abroad often begins early in a student's life. In high school, I looked closely at the programs offered by various colleges. Although I was not certain at this time that I wanted to study abroad, I wanted to go to a college where I would have the option in future years. Colleen Shoup, a junior who studied in Ripon, England, said, "I wanted to study abroad even as a child because my family periodically housed international students. I loved hearing their stories and as I got older I wanted to live these adventures I had only heard about."

Some students get the idea of studying abroad from talking with returning "wayfarers" or professors who know about or experienced this opportunity themselves. Jen Jacobs, who studied in both Mexico and England said, "Dr. Katz, my general advisor, really brought the idea forward for me. She thought it would be a good experience for me. I enjoy different cultures, traveling and learning from different people. The programs also fit well into my schedule."

It is the goal of David Sowell, Director of International Programs, and Jarmila Polte, Study Abroad Advisor, that by the time a student starts his or her sophomore year, he or she has a good understanding of the programs offered.

For myself and many others, the decision to go abroad was one of the most courageous I had to make. I recall thinking about leaving my family, how nervous I would feel boarding the plane, and all the minor problems I would encounter thousands of miles away. Dr. Sowell remarked, "I ask students to think seriously about their plans. They should recognize that the period will be one of the best experiences in their lives, but also it will not be a bed of roses. Any study abroad experience is challenging, and some are more challenging than others. If students are too closely linked with their families, their significant others, or their friends, separation anxiety can be very real."

Of course, the amount of

English learning environment, which was important to me," said Kunio Max Sayanagi, a freshman physics/computer science major from Japan. "My English skills have improved very much. I came to Juniata as an ESL student a year ago. I could not really communicate in English then, but now I can communicate, and I've got many friends. I have changed because of the change of language. I can be more open when I am speaking English rather than Japanese, and I like it that way."

Juniata's faculty should be credited for much of the recent progress that has been made to increase the international presence on campus, according to both Dr. Sowell and Harriet L. Marsh, an external reviewer who conducted a thorough analysis of the college's international program last winter. In her report, Dr. Marsh wrote, "Developing stronger international departmental offerings has found considerable acceptance with the faculty. Positively disposed to begin with (and this element is perhaps the sine qua non of any attempts to 'internationalize a campus'), faculty have strongly supported initiatives in this direction, with several courses having added such objectives – and often content – to their offerings."

Many departments now include international dimensions to course offerings, such as Studies in International Political Economy (economics and business administration), Cultures of the World (sociology), Intercultural Communication (communications), and, most recently, Cultural Analysis (education).

International students routinely praise Juniata's faculty for making their experience educational and, more importantly, enjoyable. "The best thing about JC are the profs and their personal attention that they give you. They are very understanding, and they are out there to help you," said Shaziya Haque, a senior biology major from Pakistan.

In co-curricular programming, IPO, the Office of Student Services, and student organizations, such as the International Club and United Cultures of Juniata College (UCJC), have helped create more campus events that enable international students to celebrate their respective heritage and cultures.

On the other hand, one negative incident can tarnish the many good feelings brought on by the majority. Two female international students remain upset because they were "denied the opportunity to even try out for the women's basketball team."

"I would have really liked to play or, at least, try out to compare the competition level to my home country," said one of the would-be hardwood players. "I wasn't made to feel very welcome, because the coach told me, 'No.'"

Other concerns include increasing the number of domestic students who participate in the study abroad program as well as budgetary and staff constraints. The college's goal is to have all its students spend some time abroad, whether it's for a month's field trip in connection with a class or a semester or academic year studying in connection with each student's program of emphasis. Implementing a foreign language requirement as a means of raising awareness and interest in international time studying and attending classes is almost equaled by the time traveling to various places, including other cities, countries, and sometimes even continents. Beyond their universities and "home-towns," these students often encounter their most memorable experiences. As Jen Jacobs states, "Being able to travel a lot was wonderful. Not only did I get to see so many European cities and towns, but these journeys strengthened my organizational and social skills." This continuous travelling teaches one how to handle difficult situations despite language and cultural differences and adapt to new and constantly changing environments. Marsha Batzel, who studied in Ripon, England said, "The most important thing I learned was how to be flexible and respect others. It is amazing how much you learn about yourself when you are in the minority." Colleen Shoup added, "I learned how little you really do need to survive. I lost all my luggage and I still survived!"

After being completely immersed in a different culture, many feel that their lives have changed. Jo Ann Kester who studied in Ecuador said, "This experience has changed my views culturally, politically and socially. I realize that the world is a bigger place than just the U.S. I knew it before I went, but now I've felt it." Students remark that they developed qualities in themselves such as perseverance, inquisitiveness, independence and diplomacy.

From the grand experience of climbing the Eiffel Tower, to the awful times to getting lost in the middle of London at night like I did, the majority of us are glad we studied abroad. Besides using this experience to lengthen our resumes, we feel our time "away" taught us things not found in any Juniata textbook or professor's lecture.

programs has become a major issue with IPO, but efforts to enact that policy failed recently. While the proposal may be reconsidered by faculty in the future, IPO continues seeking other means of increasing students' exposure to international programs.

As the engine behind Juniata's international and study abroad movement, IPO provides comprehensive services in every facet of the operations. This includes securing exchange affiliations with international colleges and universities, academic and cross-cultural orientation and counseling, working with departments to create and implement international courses, arranging short term home stays with American families, making initial airport pick-up upon the international students' arrival, and assisting with visa procurement and purchasing of medical insurance. All this work must be divided between Dr. Sowell, the director of IPO, Jarmila Polte, student advisor in international programs, Elizabeth Smelcic, director of ESL, and Sherri Cramer-Rennell, international programs assistant. During the summer ESL sessions, the office has added help with ESL instructors Amy Chamberlin, Cate Crosby, and Prudence Ingerman, as well as activities coordinator for ESL, Joda Glossner, resident assistant Shaziya Haque, and student assistant, April Fortney. In the estimation of Dr. Marsh, IPO needs the addition of one full-time staff position if it is to meet all the present and future demands of expansion. All of which requires increased funding, another obstacle to address.

The key to overcoming current and future obstacles to international-

While Kelly Morton ('98) was studying and traveling in the United Kingdom, she was visited by her boyfriend, Terry Rismiller ('96) who requested to be shown some of the sights that Kelly was so excited about. Imagine the surprise when at her favorite city wall, overlooking the York campus, a beautiful view she enjoyed every day, Terry, in true romantic fashion, got on one knee and asked her to marry him. Kelly and Terry are planning a Fall '98 wedding. They will always have special memories of England, courtesy of Juniata's study abroad programs.

izing the campus, according to Dr. Sowell, relies on getting every member of the college community to be conscious of the institutional goals, to accept those goals, and to contribute to the achievement of those goals whenever possible. He points to the contributions of many faculty members as an example of how the program can work successfully.

For example, Juniata's economics and business administration department has been at the forefront of making the college a global community. The leadership of the faculty members in the economics and business administration department to establish study abroad affiliations with international colleges and universities has been exemplary. James Lakso, chair of the economics and business administration department and interim provost, orchestrated the development of study abroad locations in Mexico as an extension of his initial interest in investigating Mexican economic issues in relation to the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA). Similarly, Ronald Cherry, professor of economics, has helped Juniata form alliances in Japan after first developing contacts there while he investigated the growing Asian economic power.

"The economics and business department has been outstanding in regards to incorporating an international aspect into its curriculum," Dr. Sowell said. "Program affiliations typically develop with someone from the Juniata community having a relationship with an institution abroad while they're studying or conducting research."

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

In 1989, Juniata College made a strong commitment “to provide an education within a global context by enhancing the international dimensions of the college.” President Robert W. Neff proposed a revision of Juniata’s mission statement in 1992 that made explicit the college’s historical commitment to international education.

The Juniata College Bulletin (JCB) recently interviewed six international students who attended Juniata during the Spring ‘97 semester. The basis of the interview was to gain a candid assessment of Juniata’s international program from the perspective of the international students as well as to measure Juniata’s progress in conjunction with its goals stated in the 1993 strategic plan for internationalizing the college. Participating in the interview were: Shaziya Haque (SH), a senior biology major from Pakistan/Saudi Arabia; Soraya Amores (SA), a junior business administration major from Ecuador; Christine Chen (CC), a senior environmental science/peace studies major from Burma; Kunio Max Sayanagi (KMS), a freshman computer science major from Japan; Zsafia Varadi (ZV), a junior writing and business major from Hungary; and Fred Bonekamp (FB), a senior business administration major from Germany.

A sample of the interview responses follows:

JCB: What is the social life like for an international student at Juniata?

SH: At first, I was disappointed with the social life. There was not much to do. But over the course of the year this has improved, since I joined UJC (United Cultures of Juniata College) and the International Club. American students have also been very enthusiastic and welcoming to the international students.

CC: Many students have a problem with JC because it’s located in the middle of nowhere, but I love it. There’s the cliffs, the peace chapel, plenty of places to go hiking, and Raystown Lake.

KMS: Most Americans had stereotypes of different cultures, and some international students even avoided contact with Americans. But most of us became good friends with the Americans.

ZV: Many internationals complain that Americans don’t care about internationals, but we have to make the first step. I made more friends here in the past three years than I did my whole life.

SA: The social community at Juniata has been one of the most important factors that makes me glad to be here. I have met so many different people from different countries and different parts of the U.S.

JCB: What is the academic life like for an international student at Juniata?

SH: I don’t think I would have had this chance or opportunity back home. With the new technology, we applied our skills beyond the classroom boundaries.

SA: One difference is that here the relationship between professors and students is more close.

CC: I don’t know of any other college or university where the professors would go out on a limb for you like the JC profs.

KMS: Juniata students are much more serious about their studies than the college students in Japan, generally. I have never heard such serious discussion about so many topics. I think this is a cultural difference because we don’t express personal opinion very much in Japan, where “discussion” tends to be just making up a general agreement. I like the way we discuss things here better.

FB: The year was a real break for me.

JCB: What was your first impression of Juniata, and has your perception changed since you have been here awhile?

KMS: I was impressed by the buildings made of bricks, which is not very common in Japan.

SH: I wanted to go to a bigger school at first as I knew students at a large institution would be more diversified. However, over the first couple of weeks I liked my profs and I saw that people here were a lot more accepting than I thought they would be.

FB: It is a nice place for studying, but that is it. One year here is great, but I can’t imagine staying here for more than one year because it would get real boring.

CC: The first time I came to Juniata I hated it. I found no diversity the first two years here. All the students were jocks, and I was terribly lonely. Of course, my first impression has changed 180 degrees. I learned to accept and adapt to life at JC. I took advantage of all the opportunities Juniata provided.

JCB: What is the best aspect of your life at Juniata?

FB: I like the computer network here.

ZV: My friends and my professors and knowing that I am on my own, but not alone.

SA: The best thing about Juniata is the people.

The Connection Is Juniata

One week after the Alumni Reunion of May 17 on Juniata's campus, another reunion took place 3,000 miles away in the beautiful old city of Lille, France. At the 12th Annual European International Alumni Reunion, over 60 persons with Juniata connections met in a noisy, smoke-filled, very French restaurant on Friday, May 23 to begin a week-end of fun and friendly catching up. There were hugs and kisses and shrieks of joy as people who had not seen one another for years came together from all corners of the world.

The weekend, organized by Sibylle Derville (at Juniata in '93), and Rebecca Poulain, (at Juniata in '94) kept the participants busy. Attending were Juniata international and domestic alumni (along with spouses and children), a number of U.S. students presently studying abroad on Juniata programs and Dr. Robert and Dottie Neff, Jarmila Polte, Jeff and Martha Demarest, Beverly Darkatsh and Irwin Jolles.

The entire group rose bright and early on Saturday to meet at 8 a.m. in the old part of the city for a walking tour to look at many of the ancient historic buildings. The sidewalk cafes around the fountain in the center of town were full and festive, as all the residents and students were out enjoying the beautiful weather. Later that morning, the group was hosted at a reception where a welcome to the group was extended by the president and other administrators of the Lille university. Juniata's own president, Dr. Neff, responded in appreciation of the long relationship that Juniata has had with Lille, and after some handshaking all around, the champagne flowed.

Saturday evening the joyful group gathered for the grand banquet. It's good that the Juniata contingent had its own room in the restaurant, because as the traditional Juniata toast went off things got a little loud! On Sunday, the group met at the Hotel Baleuil for a "business meeting," to exchange addresses, and to promise to meet again next year—this time in Berlin! The European alumni agreed to think about internship links for Juniata students and mused that they would like to see some of their faculty attend the reunions. With Juniata connections, you have friends all around the world.

Other examples include: Kim Richardson, professor of education and former IPO director, who helped develop a study abroad program in England, primarily for elementary education majors; Robert Hatala, former provost, and James Roney, professor of Russian, who combined to help build a Russian study abroad program.

"When we seek out study abroad programs, first and foremost, we want to select academic experiences that complement our students' program of emphasis," Dr. Sowell said. "Secondly, we favor programs that offer our students cultural immersion. We do not want a 'Juniata in Paris' program or 'Juniata in London.' Our students should be immersed in the life and culture of the country they are visiting."

In addition to establishing study abroad programs, several other departments have brought in visiting professors and lecturers, including chemistry and biology. IPO has shown its gratitude to the faculty and staff by supporting various grant proposals.

International students on campus have influenced the study in most academic departments at Juniata, perhaps none more so than economics and business administration.

"In the business department, we're getting a wider range of students from various countries than we ever have in the past," said Dr. James Donaldson, professor of economics and business administration and the director of institutional planning and research. "In recent years, we have had students from Mexico, Ecuador, and Japan in addition to our usual base of international students from England, France, Spain, and Germany.

"We're also getting international students who are high academic achievers. In France, the competition to get to Juniata is very high. These students are the cream of the crop, and they make all of our students stretch intellectually."

Once in the classroom, international students provide a dynamic that would otherwise be absent.

"When we discuss issues like NAFTA, we now have students from Mexico who have been directly affected by this policy," Dr. Lakso said. "The international students can give opinions to issues from an entirely different perspective, and that mix of opinions opens up interesting and educational discussions."

Behind the push for a more visible, viable international presence is the belief that a liberal arts education should include a diversity of thoughts and opinions, mutually benefiting both the college and its students. With its strategic plan in place, IPO continues its trek into the global village.

"On a grading scale, I would give our international program in the B-range," Dr. Sowell said. "That's okay, because it indicates, while there might be shortcomings, we are doing many things well. What we do really, really well is have an institutional commitment to our international program. In that regard, I would give us an A+, and, ultimately, having that kind of institutional commitment is what's most important when it comes to building the program."

In his keynote address to the 262 Juniata College graduates on May 11, Lieutenant General Ronald Blanck, a 1963 Juniata graduate and the current surgeon general of the United States Army, spoke of the opportunities that lie ahead for the Class of '97 – opportunities manifest in the current booming economy and job market, which has many analysts calling this the best year in over a decade for college graduates entering the work force.

General Blanck asserted that this year's graduates are riding the crest of the fourth wave of history. "Information, as Toffler writes, is the third wave of history still colliding with the second wave of industrialization which has largely overtaken the first wave of agriculture... But, there is a fourth wave," General Blanck said, "a wave that takes the information of the third and translates those elements into some kind of personal action that all of you will struggle to deal with. This fourth wave is self-actualization. It is taking charge of your life ..."

While commencement ceremonies are still fresh in the memory, many '97 graduates are already reaching a sense of self-actualization. They have taken charge of their lives in regard to career choices, supporting the premise that this is a promising year for college graduates.

Darwin Kysor, director of career services at Juniata, reports that the hiring slump for college graduates in the mid-1990s has, indeed, taken a turn for the better in 1997.

Among this year's graduates who notified Career Services of their early job placements are: Bill Carlisle and Caixiu Liu at Electronic Data Systems in Harrisburg; Mike Richards and Scott Yocum at HRB Systems in State College; Jennifer Nagele at Wyethayerst Laboratories in Princeton, N.J.; Danielle Clark and Dan Krivonak, who both obtained teaching positions in Japan; Adine

Fetterman and John Farlik at Norwest Financial in Baltimore; Kristen Holloway at PPG Industries in North Carolina; Jeffrey Martin at Airwalk Footwear in Altoona; Ken Miller at the Home Nursing Agency in Altoona; Kelly Weyandt at Fulton Bank in Lancaster; and Dan Zak at GMSI in Bethesda, Md.

In addition to its impact on the business community, the Class of '97 also has a high percentage of students entering graduate and professional schools. A Career Services survey indicates that 31 percent of this year's graduates are planning to attend graduate or professional schools.

Also, many '97 graduates have expressed an interest in volunteer employment with such programs as the Peace Corps and AmeriCorps.

No matter what path the graduates take, General Blanck encouraged them to always keep in mind life's basics. "I think the basics are who it is we are and what it is we do. Who it is we are has to do with core values, values of an organization, values of each of us as individuals. Core functions are what we do in our jobs, and in our personal life; what is important to us.

"What is important is unchanging and reflects values. These values may be at the heart of all that we do. Values of commitment, candor, courage, integrity and selfless service ...

"I add, absolute focus and commitment to patients, community involvement and family stability. These seem to me to be the bedrock for any of the waves of change because they are values for life. They are unchanging No matter what the challenges of change and of the future, I believe that families and community are what we are about. I believe giving back to those who helped you, such as this college, is important. And I believe that taking responsibility for your own actions and their consequences has an even more important place than ever before Values are the key to self-actualization - that fourth wave"

General Blanck admonished the graduates to "use the technology, the information, the acts of others to enter that fourth wave. Go on to jobs, graduate school, careers, involvement, but maintain your values. None of you will always live up to them because we are human. But the goals should always be to live up to our values. And I think that is what Juniata has prepared you to do. Now you must take the next step."

Faculty Awards

Three Juniata College faculty members were honored with distinguished teaching awards during the college's 119th commencement ceremonies. Honored for their work at the college were Dr. Karen J. Rosell, professor of art, Dr. Fay I. Glosenger, professor of education, and Russell K. Shelley, instructor in music and director of choral and vocal activities.

Dr. Rosell was honored with the thirtieth annual Beachley Distinguished Professor Award while Dr. Glosenger was named the recipient of the ninth annual Beachley Award for Distinguished Academic Service and Mr. Shelley received the Junior Faculty Award.

With outstanding academic credentials, Dr. Karen J. Rosell came to teach in and chair Juniata's art department in 1986. As a doctoral student at Ohio University, she was awarded the Siegfried Award for excellence in teaching and scholarship as well as a university doctoral fellowship. As a master's degree student at Virginia Commonwealth University, Dr. Rosell was Phi Kappa Phi, and was awarded a graduate teaching assistantship and scholarship. Dr. Rosell graduated summa cum laude and was Phi Beta Kappa and Phi Beta Sigma from the University of Richmond.

Dr. Fay I. Glosenger graduated summa cum laude from The Pennsylvania State University in 1971. She received her master's degree from the university in 1977 and her Ph.D. in 1984. Dr. Glosenger received the Pennsylvania Department of Education's Outstanding Pennsylvania Teacher of the Year Award in 1979 and brought her outstanding scholarship and experience to Juniata's Education Department in 1982. She has continued to strengthen the reputation of the department through her teaching and administrative responsibilities.

Dr. Glosenger, who currently chairs the education department at Juniata, teaches courses in developmental counseling and parenting, early childhood education, children's literature, and curriculum and methods in early childhood education.

Mr. Shelley directs the Juniata Concert Choir, the Chamber Choir, the Choral Union, the Juniata Chorale, and the Alumni Choir. Mr. Shelley also directs the State College Choral Society and the State College Madrigal Singers. At Juniata, Mr. Shelley teaches Introduction to Aesthetic Experience, Music Theory, Music Fundamentals, Introduction to Choral Music and Vocal Chamber Music.

Mr. Shelley's experience includes teaching high school music after earning his B.S. and B.S.M. degrees in music education/sacred music from Baptist Bible College of Pennsylvania, and his master's degree in vocal performance at Mansfield University of Pennsylvania. While at Mansfield, he served as assistant conductor of the Mansfield University Concert Choir and Chamber Singers.

COMMENCEM

The May 11, 1997, commencement ceremonies were highlighted by the address presented to the graduating class by Lieutenant General Ronald R. Blanck, a 1963 Juniata graduate and current surgeon general of the United States Army. General Blanck was presented an honorary doctor of humane letters degree in recognition of his many achievements.

In his commencement address, titled "Twenty-first Century Change and Abiding Values", General Blanck spoke of our society's glut of information and the threats and opportunities which this information overload presents.

General Blanck encouraged the graduates to keep the glut of information in context by returning to life's basics. "I think the basics are who it is we are and what it is we do. Who it is we are has to do with core values, values of an organization, values of each of us as individuals. Core functions are what we do in our jobs, and in our personal life; what is important to us."

Juniata College also honored one of its most loyal supporters by presenting the honorary degree Doctor of Laws to 1956 graduate and former board chair Klare S. Sunderland. Mr. Sunderland is president of Sun Enterprises, Inc., and owner and operator of Sun Motor Cars, Inc. of Camp Hill, as well as a Mercedes Benz BMW dealership in Chicago.

Mr. Sunderland was presented for the degree by Dr. Ronald L. Cherry, the Charles A. Dana supported professor of economics at Juniata. In his introduction, Dr. Cherry reflected on Mr. Sunderland's Central Pennsylvania roots.

Dr. Cherry spoke of Mr. Sunderland's commitment to Juniata College and the extent to which that commitment has helped to shape Juniata's future. "His personal leadership has helped Juniata move toward the embrace of an effective, goal oriented, marketing approach to the business of education.... And by his own significant gift to the recent capital campaign he established the character and horizon of that entire effort. In short," Dr. Cherry concluded, "in the five years which he gave himself to serve as chairman, he gave of himself in ways that have and will continue to ensure the future of the institution for which he so obviously cares."

As a business and civic leader, Mr. Sunderland has gained a reputation for his integrity, dynamic business spirit and foresight.

Alumni Service & Achievement

W Clemens Rosenberger '54 was awarded the Alumni Service Award, and Melvin M. Wenger '35 was presented with the Alumni Achievement Award.

Ronald Seiler, who served as Juniata's Alumni Council President for the past year, cited Mr. Rosenberger's "unwavering and faithful support of Juniata College" as the basis for recognizing him with the Alumni Service Award.

Mr. Seiler cited the "business foresight and entrepreneurial spirit" as well as the "exceptional contribution to the agricultural economy of south central Pennsylvania" as the reasons for selecting Mr. Wenger as the recipient of the Alumni Achievement Award.

Alumni Gavel Pass

James R. Tufano took over the presidency of the Juniata College Alumni Council on May 17, 1997, at the annual Alumni Council meeting. Current Alumni Council President Ron Seiler stepped down from the post with the ceremonial gavel passing.

Mr. Tufano, a 1962 Juniata graduate, has served as the Alumni Council Vice-President during the past year. During that time, he has worked closely with Mr. Seiler in the hopes of making a smooth transition. "Jim and I have worked together to make the transition more of a continuation instead of a new start," Mr. Seiler said.

Juniata's first-ever children's program during Alumni Weekend got an impromptu and glowing review from 6-year-old Hannah Werner. When parents Tina and Stephen L. Werner '67 came to pick up their two daughters, Hannah and 4-year-old Myra, from the children's program at the South Hall Lounge they were greeted with a warm welcome as well as a passionate plea. "Can we stay?" Hannah begged. "We're having a perfect time."

Juniata instituted two children's programs for this year's Alumni Weekend to provide childcare facilities and family activities for those returning alumni who have children. Four Juniata College education majors operated the on-campus children's program. Another four students assisted Juniata professors Chuck Yohn, Mary Hague, and Jill Keeney, along with Dr. Keeney's husband, Martin, with a program at the Juniata College Field Station at Raystown Lake.

Both programs were a big hit with the kids. While the children participating in the on-campus program played cards, hopscotch, uno, four square, and read stories before having a pizza party and a sleep-over in South Hall, those out at the field station were engrossed with the great outdoors, tractor rides, and the many critters that were gathered for show-and-tell.

"We had a great time," said Kathy Wilson, a sophomore volunteer for the on-campus children's program. "All the kids seemed to really enjoy themselves."

Lynanne Schaeffer, director of alumni development, organized the on-campus children's program after hearing from several alumni.

"The input that we received from many alumni in the past was that they wanted to come back for Alumni Weekend, but they couldn't find an adequate place for their children," Ms. Schaeffer said. "Several alumni said they would like to attend this year's Alumni Weekend, too, but they had no one to watch their children. Many didn't have relatives or friends nearby (to watch their kids) and it was too costly to pay a babysitter for the entire weekend. So, we confronted that problem by forming an Alumni Weekend children's program here on campus. We got great support for the idea, and four students who volunteered their time and did a great job running the program."

The on-campus volunteers were recruited from the student organization, Juniata Instructors of the Future (JIF). Joining Ms. Wilson in running the on-campus program were fellow freshmen education majors Rachael Hollen and Julia Tutino and sophomore Mike Kreger.

The student volunteers combined their training in education with their previous experience as camp counselors to plan and implement the program. "We had several meetings to discuss what we wanted to put into the program and how we would organize it," Ms. Wilson said.

The children's program at the field station was assisted by student volunteers Dave Kaylor, Cara Kelley, Mike Niebauer, and Branden Staub.

The idea to host a children's program at the field station was spawned by many other successful youth ventures at the field station, such as Boy Scout outings and various day camps. The emphasis of the outdoor program was threefold, according to Mr. Yohn: "We wanted the program to be family-oriented with activities for all ages; we wanted to include activities that were educational; and we wanted the program to be entertaining for everyone," he said. "We were successful in all those areas, thanks to all our volunteers, who had a great time themselves."

Alumni Weekend '97
Juniata
COLLEGE

Craig Baxter, professor of politics and history, has had two books published. The first, the Historical Dictionary of Bangladesh, is a collaborative effort with Dr. Syedur Rahman of Penn State University. It is in its second edition from Scarecrow Press and was published in December 1996. Juniata students Abby Wertzberger '95, Julia Elvey '96, and Syed Omay Ahmed Karimussan '96 assisted Dr. Baxter with research, while Kenneth Miller '98 and Matthew Sherer '98 assisted in formatting.

The second book, Bangladesh: From a Nation to a State, was published in January 1997 as part of the "Nations of the Modern World: Asia" series. Juniata students Jessica Peters '97, Michael Miller '96, and Syed Omay Ahmed Karimussan '96 contributed research.

Ei-Ichiro Ochiai, professor of chemistry, had an article "The Manifestation of Evolutionary Pressure - Principles and Applications in Bioinorganic Chemistry - IX" published recently in J. Chem. Ed., 74, 348-354 (1997). Ochiai's 100th article "Electron Transport in Proteins and DNAs - Principles and Applications in Bioinorganic Chemistry - X" was published in Journal of Chemical Education, vol. 74, 600-604 (1997).

Deb Kirchhof-Glazier, professor of biology, was recently elected to the Executive Committee Northeast Association of Advisors for Health Professions. She will serve a three-year term.

Deb Kirchhof-Glazier

Doug Glazier, professor of biology, has recently been selected to the Invertebrate Technical Committee of the Pennsylvania Biological Survey. The purpose of the Pennsylvania Biological Survey is to increase the knowledge of and foster the perpetuation of natural biological diversity of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Glazier was recently elected as a councilor in the Biology Division of the Council on Undergraduate Research. CUR is a national organization representing over 850 institutions in seven Divisions (disciplines). Its primary goal is to encourage development of undergraduate research programs through meetings, workshops, publications, grants, consulting, and congressional lobbying. Doug joins Dave Reingold, professor of chemistry, who has been a CUR councilor for several years.

Doug Glazier and Beth Sparks '96 have published an article in the February 1997 issue of Functional Ecology. The article is titled "Energetics of amphipods in ion-poor waters: stress resistance is not invariably linked to low metabolic rates." Doug also presented a paper, co-authored with Scott Newcomer '96, at the 1997 Pennsylvania Natural History Conference (April 25-27). The paper was titled "Allochrony: A new way of analyzing life histories, as illustrated with mammals."

Bob Wagoner, professor of philosophy, has had his book "The Meanings of Love - An Introduction to Philosophy of Love" published under the Praeger imprint of the Greenwood Publishing Group (in hardback and paperback).

Donald Durnbaugh, college archivist, gave the inaugural address at the inauguration of Gary Dill, the 12th president of McPherson College in McPherson, Kansas. He also made three presentations at the Faith and Heritage pre-inaugural conference at the Kansas college campus on March 6-7.

Jill Keeney, assistant professor of biology, and research student Amy Morgan '97, attended the "Transposition and Site-Specific Recombination" Keystone Symposium in Santa Fe, NM during spring break. They presented a poster titled "Identification of host genes involved in temperature sensitive retrotransposition." Amy was the only undergraduate student to present at the meeting.

Physics professors Wilfred Norris, Ray Pfrogner and Norm Siems, accompanied by student Troy Abe '98, attended the annual meeting of the Central Pennsylvania Section of the American Association of Physics Teachers (CPS/AAPT) at Shippensburg University. The meeting included 19 contributed papers (many by students), exhibits, a banquet, and two invited speakers - Dr. Peter Matic of the Naval Research Laboratory and Dr. Edwin Golden of the American Institute of Physics' Career Services.

Norm Siems chaired one of the invited sessions and presented a report at the business meeting. He is the Section Representative of the organization and as such represents CPS/AAPT on the national level as a member of the Council of AAPT.

Ray Pfrogner moderated the roundtable discussion on "Physics at the Crossroads," a discussion of future directions for the introductory courses.

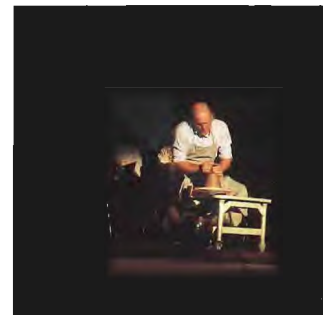

James Donaldson, professor of economics and business administration, will serve on the Marketing Curriculum Advisory Committee for the Huntingdon Area Vo-Tech School. The program is served by a panel of professionals and educators who annually assess the curriculum, equipment, program, etc. and make recommendations.

Jack Troy, assistant professor of art, taught workshops at the Cambridge, Wisconsin, Potters Association; at the Mesa Art Center, Mesa, Arizona; and at Fairmont State College in Fairmont, West Virginia where he was the featured artist at the Kestrel Literary and Arts Festival. Recent issues of Ceramics Monthly Magazine contain the articles, "Gleanings: A Potter in China," and "A Certain Depth of Caring."

Troy was among a group of ceramics teachers and artists who visited Mexico City as part of the annual conference of the National Council for Education in the Ceramic Arts held in Las Vegas. He presented a paper at the conference titled "Ceramics in the Information Age."

Troy has been invited to build a wood-burning kiln at Gothenburg University in Sweden this summer.

Dale Wampler, director of the academic computer center; David Fusco, network manager; and Robert Hatala, provost, participated in the annual Information Technologies Workshop in Pittsburgh, Pa. April 3-5. The workshop was co-sponsored by the Council of Independent Colleges, CAUSE, EDUCOM, and C-CUE. Provost Hatala was invited to address a general forum and spoke on "The Role of Independent Colleges in the Information Age - Next Steps."

Fay Glosenger, professor of education, visited King's College March 11-13 with Ron Simanovitch from the Pa. Department of Education to conduct a preliminary state review of King's new early childhood certification program. She also visited the King's College and St. Mary's Day Care Center, a new facility, and met with college officials to discuss their curriculum and plans for the future. Dr. Glosenger has served as a state reviewer for early childhood programs at West Chester, Cabrini College, and Eastern College over the past three years.

The Council of Undergraduate Research (CUR) Institute held its annual conference March 14-16, and four Juniata College representatives attended the affair in Asheville, N.C. Robert Hatala, provost and vice president for student development, was joined by Darlene Lamey, assistant professor of education, David Reingold, professor of chemistry, and Alex Wilke, assistant professor of mathematics.

CUR also held an April Dialogue meeting April 11-12 at the National Institutes of Health headquarters in Bethesda, Maryland, where Dr. Reingold ran a workshop called "How To Develop Undergraduate Research in Chemistry."

Dr. Reingold attended the "Day 2-to-40 Workshop Symposium In Chemical Education" May 10-11 at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, where he discussed Juniata's chemistry curriculum. He also attended the CUR conference at Lafayette College in Easton, Pennsylvania June 19-21. He serves as CUR's Chair-elect of the chemistry department. In July, he was invited to review the National Science Foundation proposals, and he will spend some time in January 1998 at the "Gordon Conference on Innovations in College Chemistry Teaching" in Ventura, California, where he was invited to again speak about Juniata's chemistry curriculum.

Juniata College was well represented at the 11th National Conference on Undergraduate Research (NCUR), which was held April 24-26 at the University of Texas at Austin. A total of 12 Juniata students and four faculty members participated in NCUR 97, which brought together undergraduates involved in scholarly research and artistic activities throughout the United States.

The 12 Juniata students who presented their research work at NCUR included Matt Zimmerman '98 and class of 1997 members Kelley Gebhardt, Deb Branch, Sara Gozalo, Shannon Cain, Nicole DeNovio, Alon Tatsas, Justin Hardick, Tyler Heibek, Jonathan Keim, Chuck Skillman, and Doug Dillon.

The four Juniata College faculty members who accompanied their students on the trip were: Dave Reingold, professor of chemistry; Jeff Demarest, associate professor of biology; Fengman Zhang, assistant professor of mathematics and computer science; and Brian Williams, the Camille and Henry Dreyfus Teaching Postdoctoral Fellow.

David Hawsey, Juniata's dean of enrollment for the past two years, will assume the responsibility of associate vice president for college advancement and marketing. In his new role, Hawsey will create a comprehensive plan for complete cradle-to-grave relationship building with Juniata's varied constituencies.

Hawsey, who began his duties at Juniata on April 10, 1995, has provided leadership and direction to the student enrollment program. He has supervised all areas of enrollment management, including admissions and student financial planning. In addition he has provided management support in the areas of athletic recruiting and international recruiting, and serves as the chair of the college retention committee.

Robert Washburn, professor of geology, was the recipient of the 1997 Environmental Achievement Award presented by the Huntingdon County Commissioners at this year's Earth Day celebration. Dr. Washburn was nominated to receive the award by the Earth Day Committee of Huntingdon County. He was recognized for his 20-plus years of service on the county planning commission as well as his contributions in establishing Pulpit Rocks as a National Historic Landmark and the establishment of the Rocky Ridge Natural Area at Martins Gap.

Robert Washburn

Fifteen years after leaving Juniata College to join the consulting firm Marts & Lundy, Inc., Foster G. Ulrich, Jr. has returned to the Juniata campus to assume the responsibilities of interim vice president for college advancement and marketing. Ulrich has joined the college administration as a Marts & Lundy consultant for the 1997-98 academic year. He will continue in his position as vice president for the Lyndhurst, New Jersey based firm.

Numerous free-weight stations will be available in the Sam and Martha Brumbaugh Fitness Center

When the Kennedy Sports+ Recreation Center was completed in 1983, the Juniata College campus had an athletic facility to match any in the Middle Atlantic Conference. Over the past months, an evolution of the Center has begun. This process will catapult the Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center onto a short list of the finest Division III facilities in the nation.

This summer the $300,000 Sam and Martha Brumbaugh Fitness Center will open on the lower level of the Center.

The state of the art 5,470 square foot workout area features 55 pieces of modern strength, cardio, and freeweight/bodyweight equipment. Each piece of the strengthening apparatus has a navy padded name plate with Juniata College stitched in white. Off to the "main" room, is an area filled with large weights and platforms which will permit an Olympic weight training workout.

Located in the former multi-purpose room of the Center, the new facility has had further enhancements with new lighting, a sound system, mirrors, and a sectioned glass wall at the front of the room. The fitness center has been painted blue with mauve trim which matches the brand new mauve carpeting.

"From an athletic stand point, we are viewing the facility as a tool to fully develop our athletes," said Athletic Director Larry Bock. "We are going to use the fitness center to develop our players into better athletes. Anyone who chooses Juniata will have an opportunity to become a better athlete by using this facility."

He continued, "From a student, faculty, and staff point of view, it is a knock-out facility and a great place to spend time, get fit, stay healthy, and be strong."

The project, which was started late this past fall, was made possible through phase one of a three tiered athletic facilities improvement initiative. Financial support, including a lead gift from Juniata College Trustee Sam Brumbaugh and his wife, Martha, helped the project take shape.

Sam Brumbaugh, the president of Bangor Cork Company, Inc. of Pen Argyl, Pa., is a 1954 graduate of Juniata. He was a member of the Juniata College Board as an alumni trustee from 1987 to 1990. In May of 1991, Brumbaugh was voted into his current role with the Juniata Board of Trustees. A committed supporter of Eagle athletics, he also earned the College's Alumni Service Award in 1996. He and his wife, Martha, reside in Pen Argyl.

Phase two of the project includes improvement of Juniata's outdoor athletic areas, both practice and game fields, while the third and final phase will focus on additional improvements to the Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center, specifically the Memorial Gym floor and locker room areas.

"The facility is state-of-the-art and shows Juniata's commitment to its students and student-athletes when it comes to personal fitness," said Joe Scialabba, the College's director of the annual fund and the J-Club. "Personal fitness and health continues to be of major importance to our students, and this new facility is very appropriate."

To go along with the fitness center, Juniata College hired a full-time strength and conditioning coach who will oversee the day-to-day operations of the new facility, including working with individuals to maximize their performance on the new equipment.

"Compared to other schools in the Middle Atlantic Conference who have fitness centers, this puts us at the top of the list without question," said head men's basketball coach Rick Ferry. Ferry, who will run the overall fitness operation, including serving as the membership director, was largely responsible for organizing the project from beginning to end. "The combination of the Sam and Martha Brumbaugh Fitness Center and a strength and conditioning coach should undoubtedly improve the athletic program's overall performance on the playing surface. It is a huge step in the right direction."

The batting cages which used to be housed in the multi-purpose room have been moved to either side of the mezzanine area of the main gym and can be raised and lowered with the flip of a switch.

Dear Juniata Alumni.

The beginning of a new academic year at Juniata is a good time for all alums to reflect on their relationship with their Alma Mater. It is a good time to strengthen bridges already in place and, if need be, to build new ones with the college, with faculty old and new, and with classmates who were an important part of our family away from home during our "growing up years" at J.C.

Juniata needs your loyalty, your involvement and your support if it is to ensure that future generations of Juniataians are provided with the highest level of opportunity for personal growth and professional preparation. Stewardship at Juniata takes many forms - your volunteer service in an area of need is as important as your monetary gifts and personal advocacy. The choice is yours.

As President of your Alumni Council this year, I want to share with you some of my goals and expectations for what will continue to be an engaged, active, working Council in the year ahead.

1. To promote volunteerism and stewardship among all who love Juniata and care about its future;
2. To strengthen our newly created Alumni Career Team Network in the interest of assisting with the employment needs of graduating seniors and all alums;
3. To plan and sponsor an on-campus Summer Leadership Conference for volunteer leaders of Juniata;
4. To strive to represent the thinking and interests of the mainstream of our 10,000+ alums as we share ideas with and make recommendations to college staff and administration;
5. To help those alums who have remained distant in their relationship with Juniata to find a way to reconnect with the college and those who care about its well-being.

Finally, the Alumni Council really needs your help, support and constructive criticism if we are to truly represent your interests. Please contact Lynanne Schaeffer, Director of Alumni Development, me or any Alumni Council member to let us know how we can help you or if you wish to offer your time and expertise as a volunteer.

I hope that I have succeeded in stirring up some positive feelings about Juniata College! I would like to share this thought for reflection:

"And when I hear, as I often have heard, far away, people speak of the devotion of Juniata's students, I can tell them that it is not fine buildings nor expensive equipment...but that it is the surroundings which temper the mind, and an influence not readily accounted for which shapes the life and intensifies the interests."

An Alum Writes . . .

Dear Editor,

There should be more human interest in the "Bulletin." While it is always important and exciting to hear about the usual happenings at Juniata, it is these special situations that really make Juniata a unique secondary education opportunity. We all hear enough of the bad situations in the news, but we need to learn more about the great things that are happening, it is what reaffirms our faith, belief and hope for the goodness we know exists.

This particular story (seeing-eye dog news release) is of great interest to me. Not only because I love animals, but working with people with disabilities, I know the importance of seeing-eye dogs. For people with visual impairments, these animals are their freedom, their opportunity, their eyes to life. More important, it is a great opportunity for people without disabilities to learn about assistive devices/animals. For seeing-eye dogs, this is not a day in the woods, this is work. People without disabilities need to learn this fact. Assistive animals are not for play or fun.

Recently, at the 30th Street Train Station in Philadelphia, there was a gentleman with a visual impairment using a seeing-eye dog. The dog very expertly got him into the building and up to a window. However, the clerk told the gentleman he was to wait in line for the next available window, like other passengers. She provided no directions to the end of the line, but called for the next customer. Unfortunately the dog cannot read. I helped the man to the back of the line. Shortly some young men got in line behind the man and dog. As the line moved forward, they made an attempt to "play" with the dog. The owner politely informed them that it was inappropriate to distract the dog while he was working. The young men apologized. When the man and dog reached the front of the line, neither was able to know when the next clerk was available. The two young men began to walk around the man and dog, to jip their way to the ticket counter. I intervened and directed the man and his dog to the clerk who had originally sent him to the back of the line. The clerk and the two young men hopefully learned a lesson about humanitarianism. I also asked the clerk if there was someone available to assist this man to his train. I believe she did learn her lesson, for she apologized for not helping him during his original request. She admitted that she thought with the dog, he did not need special assistance. Very quietly the man answered, my dog can't read! We all laughed.

We will continue to see more people with disabilities using assistive devices, and we are the ones who should be educated about how and when to respond. It really is very simple. Treat a person with a disability like a person. Ask if he or she needs help and how you should help.

Education is often best learned through experience.

I was almost to the top of Half Dome in Yosemite Park California (6 hour climb) and I looked over to see Jeff Capriotti ("Cappy") 1980. Needless to say it was quite a surprise! --Lynn Chellel '81

As I began the second leg of a cross country flight, I boarded a American Airlines plane in Dallas Fort Worth bound for Philadelphia. Just as I turned into my row, I heard a "Hi!--Tracy, is it?" I looked up in surprise (this is one of those places that you never expect to be recognized!) to see Roger Spatz '83 who was also traveling on business in the row behind me. We chatted and renewed our JC/Reading ties as we soared on to Philly. I told Roger about the Alumni list serve and he asked me to get him involved-- Welcome Roger! --Tracy Leigh (Strough) Grajewski '86

BIRTHS

James R. Myers, Jr. '67 and his wife, Elizabeth, announce the birth of their daughter, Jacqueline Christine. She was born on September 19, 1996.

Thomas W. Mears, Jr. '71 and his wife, Ursula, are pleased to announce the birth of their daughter, Christine Angela, born on October 4, 1996. Janine (age 9) and Robert (age 7) are enjoying their new sibling. Tom is still living in Brussels and continues to serve as director of management of NATO. It is a busy and challenging time of change management as the priorities of the Alliance evolve in response to the changing political environment.

Larry D. Lashinsky '79 and his wife, Karen became the proud parents of triplets. On February 3, 1997, Elise Isabel, 2 lbs. 10 ozs., Andrew Craig, 2 lbs. 14 ozs., and Nicholas Kristopher, 2 lbs. 7 ozs. were born. After a month in the hospital, they came home in early March and are doing well.

Sandra (Shrey) '79 and Jeffrey A. Morral '79 announce the birth of their son, Benjamin Joel. He was born on November 28, 1996 at Lancaster General Hospital. Benjamin gave them something to be very thankful for on Thanksgiving.

Mary (Cummings) Allen '83 and her husband, Mark, announce the birth of their son, Andrew John. He was born on November 3, 1996. Mary is the catering sales manager for Hotel Sofitel in Miami, FL.

Nancy (Roach) Gurdak '83 and husband, Robert, announce the birth of their first child, Andrew Robert, born on March 11, 1997 at the Northside Medical Center in Youngstown, OH. He was delivered by the Chief of OB and Juniata graduate, Dr. Charles L. DeMario '71. Nancy writes of her experience, "Once my husband and I married and wanted to have children, I had trouble finding an OB I liked. My husband's cytotechnologist raved about her OB/GYN and I decided to make an appointment. While waiting for the doctor in his office, I began reading his diplomas. One looked terribly familiar to me and I noticed it was in Latin. I got up to read it and lo and behold it was a Juniata College diploma. I knew then and there this was the physician for me. If he graduated from JC he was a very competent doctor. I can now tell you from experience of childbirth that Dr. DeMario is an excellent physician. I'd say that was an unusual circumstance to have met a JC alumnus!"

Jacqueline (Doto) '83 and Michael T. White '82 announce the birth of their son, Jacob Francis, born on January 6, 1997. Jacob weighed 8 lbs. 13 oz. and was 21 inches long. He joins Sarah (age 10), Matthew (age 7), and Rachel (age 5).

The Juniata Fund Sets Another Record in 1996-97

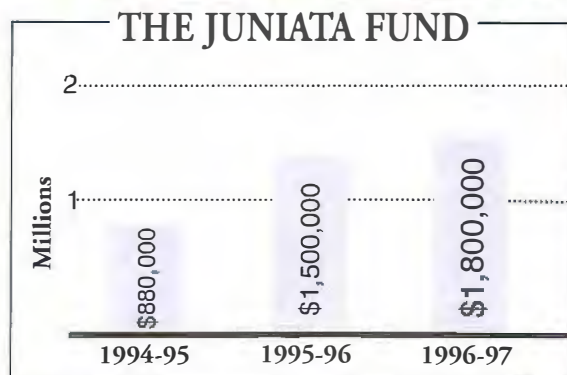

For the second consecutive year the annual Juniata Fund effort has exceeded $1 million. The final tallies for the 1996-97 fiscal year, which ended June 30, set a new TJF record of $1,080,395 – surpassing last year's previous high mark of $1,053,920.

The Juniata Fund allows the college to enhance existing programs and, in many cases, create new ones. Annual giving to The Juniata Fund supplements student scholarships and financial aid, and provides support for Beeghley Library, student services, academic departments and athletics programs.

Rev. W. Clemens Rosenberger '54 concluded his service as chair of the fund with the completion of this year's effort. Rev. Rosenberger, a Juniata trustee, has been volunteer chair of The Juniata Fund since 1993.

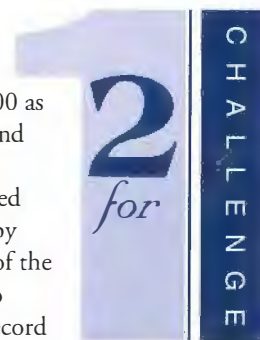

"We would not be the institution we are today without the generosity of our alumni and friends," President Robert W. Neff said. "It took a wide range of people to make this most recent record-setting year happen. And, without question, Rev. Rosenberger's leadership has been critical to the success of The Juniata Fund."

The Juniata Fund was again aided by the collective participation from Class Fund Agents. Sixty-one of Juniata's graduating classes are represented by CFAs. The Juniata Fund goals for 1997-98 include surpassing $1.1 million and establishing a new record with more than 4,380 alumni donors.

Elma Heckler '50 and her husband Howard showed their commitment to Juniata through the special 2-for-1 Challenge. The Hecklers pledged $50,000 as a challenge to other alumni and friends to contribute at least $100,000 in new and increased dollars to The Juniata Fund by June 30, 1997. The success of the 2-for-1 Challenge was vital to setting a new Juniata Fund record of over $1.08 million in 1996-97.
